

“Sublime salads”

Revolver's Thai pop star owner with a penchant for five-spice fried chicken has combined forces with chef Karen Batson (Cookie, The Toff in Town). The result? Imagine a Thai hawker cart colliding with an American diner. Cosy-up on the couches or under the chandeliers at the back tables. Friendly staff will explain that 'Bangkok bolognese' (spicy tomatoey pork ragu with Thai basil) is the Colonel's twist on drunken rice noodles. Or try garlicky Thai sausage, or kaffir lime and chicken nuggets with a sharp relish. Sublime salads (like chicken and coconut with grilled banana peppers) err on the delicate side, so if your dinning with some lining, go for some Penang lamb curry instead.
